About the Six-Gun Seven

In 1863, bounty hunter Jake "Six-Gun" Sawyer had a run-in with something that defied everything he knew about the world. After that, he spend some time trying to figure out what was really going on. The good news was that he wasn't crazy. The bad news was that monsters, magic, and other stuff that most people relegated to fairy stories really was out there. Jake decided that if there were monsters, there should also be monster hunters and put together a team to help run herd on the creepy crawlies. While the group openly operates as bounty hunters and general purpose hired guns, they're always keeping an eye out for things that ain't quite right. Although not quite as famous as Wild Bill or the Earp brothers, the "Six-Gun Seven," as dime novelist Wayne Marlowe dubbed them, have made a name for themselves. In 1869, President Grant discovered the Seven's true mission and recruited them to act as Special Agents of the U.S. government. They help keep tabs on supernatural creatures and events throughout America and the territories and answer directly to the President.
